He is most proud of the integrity and compassion of those he considers friends. He paid his own way through college and took a job as a bill collector with his first post-college employer. After seventeen years with this Fortune 200/Best in Class organization he left as a senior vice president where he managed a portfolio in excess of three billion dollars to start his own company with a former senior manager of his. Scott is dedicated to mentoring others and always keeps himself close to the community, serving on several boards, and he founded a non-profit to serve special needs children. Scott graduated from the University of Maryland, has an entrepreneur certificate from SMU, and is a practicing black belt in martial arts. Scott continues to seek relevant opportunities to grow both professionally and personally. Always being the anew kida led to the development of Scottas personality trait of being a conscientious observer. That coupled with a breadth of friendships and willingness to stretch allowed him to recognize that experiences in his everyday life and those of his friends and co-workers could be applied to business scenarios. This fun book will entertain you with the real-life social situations that provide templates to overlay into your professional life.
