Not illustrated. 1911 Excerpt: .a more or less vicarious way in connection with United States history, political philosophy, etc., as is the case in many of the schools of the present day. Possibly also surveying might rise higher in the scale if we were able to separate the cases where trigonometry meant trigonometry and its applications, as was frequently the case earlier. Still, even with these qualifications it would appear that the legal requirements for this type of high school were not by any means universally met, especially when we remember that we are considering here a selected group of towns. (3) Of the subjects required by law in high schools in towns of four thousand inhabitants and over, of which there are forty in this group of sixty-three towns, the following percentages are found: TABLE XXIII Towns Per Cent. Greek 55 87.3 French 55 87.3 Astronomy 51 80.9 Geology...
