It is built of old colored red brick, trimmed with stone and the exterior is severely restrained in execution, all embellishment being subordinated to the dominant note of a dignified simplicity which characterizes the structure from ground to roof-peak. In such a house one naturally expects to find furniture of contemporary mobiliary type and the promise of decorative consistency is fully carried out. In most cases, the closely related and chronologically adjacent William and Mary and Queen Anne styles may be blended and concurrently used with perfect propriety. This blending may be seen in the accompanying illustrations and the combina The Inirleately Carved Overmamel in the Ball Room ol Robert L. Montgomerys House at lthan tion has been singularly felicitous as Sir. Charles Allom, whose American representatives carried out the interior decorations, is understood to be particularly in sympathy with the decorative modes aforementioned. In this connection, it may be interesting to note that Sir Charles Allom, the decorator to His Majesty King George, is the first decorator to receive the recognition of knighthood since Sir Christopher Vren. The illustrations show three of the principal rooms, to wit, the dining-room, the living-hall and the ballroom. The living-hall is carried out in European oak, specially selected with the utmost care to ensure grace and beauty of coloring and grain which is undeniably one of the keynotes to the charm and restfulness of so many of the rooms of the-Villiam and Mary...
