DIALOQUE I. Colporteur. Can I sell you a Bible or Testament this morning? they are very cheap. Roman-catholic. We do not approve of your Bibles. They are not correct; and our priests warn us against them. Colp. Do they furnish you with such as are correct? Have you a Bible in the house? Rom. No; our priest says the common people have no need of the Bible; they do not know how to interpret it; and reading it would do them more harm than good. He says that whatever is necessary he will teach us; and if we believe as the church believes it is enough. Colp. But may not a priest be a bad man? Is it not possible that he may not know the truth, and therefore cannot lead you in the right way? Is it wise to venture your salvation upon the fidelity of a fallible man? Rom. The thing which you suppose is possible; priests are but men, and some of them frail men; but we can do no better than commit our souls to their keeping. If we should offend them they might refuse to give us absolution. Colp. We never read that Christ or his apostles ever forbade the people to read the Scriptures; on the contrary, they exhorted men to search the Scriptures, and blamed them for not knowing what was written in them. All Scripture is said to be profitable...
