Templeton Foundation Pr October 2005, 2005. Paper Back. Book Condition: New. Does God exercise providential care? Can He be addressed in prayer? Or does our current understanding of physical process exclude this kind of relationship with God? These questions always rise to the surface of our thinking about science and religion, and, to his credit, Polkinghorne addresses them head-on. His conclusion, seemingly modest yet full of wisdom, that 'there is no more reason to doubt the coherence of belief in divine providential agency than there is to doubt our experience of human intentional agency' still frames the debate. Polkinghorne is here at his best: fluent, accessible, well informed, and staunchly faithful to orthodox Christianity.
